DID YOU KNOW?

A wine glass has been designed to solve a common problem in Restaurants – catching the Waiter's eye to refill your wine glass. Each glass is tagged with a microchip linked to a thin radio-frequency coil inside its base. When the level of wine begins to fall, less of the glass is in contact with the insulating liquid. So when the glass needs refilling, a message containing the glasses unique identification code is sent by the receiver hidden in the centre of the table to a Waiter's bleeper or to a display behind the bar alerting them to the fact that your glass needs a top up.

We think it's just better to ask.
